James A. Herne in "Sag Harbor" at English's.

Once more a large number of patrons of English's Opera House have slighted great play and a great company. That James A. Herne and his group of talented associates should present a play like "Sag Harbor" to such an inadequate audience as assembled in English's Opera House last night would not have been forecasted by even the most pessimistic observer of the manner in which the fickle theater-going public of this city usually treats brilliant productions. James A. Herne is a veteran actor of established reputation. "Sag Harbor," as anybody might have known full well, who keeps abreast of the times, is and has been one of the most pronounced dramatic successes in recent years. To those who thoroughly enjoy lifelike plays that are brimful of the purest gems of humor and pathos, "Sag Harbor" is thoroughly satisfying. The scenes of the drama all take place in the little town of Sag Harbor, Me., which has an actual existence-a place that is prolific of interesting and curious people. A number of these people appear on the stage, and, so far as the closest observer can detect, they are real. Further than this, the production has been staged in a manner to keep up the Illusion to the very last moment. The curtain rising on the first act discloses one of the beautiful marine views that has placed on the local stage in seasons. Captain Dan Marble's ing" vessel is in plain view on the cks, drawn up high and dry for repairs. in the background the sea stretches out in the dim distance, placid and beautiful beneath a Mayday sun. Here Captain Dan finds courage to tell the old yet ever new story to Elizabeth Ann Turner, a comely and attractive spinster. Here also is given the opening chapter of one of the most dramatic entanglements of hearts ever described in a play. Just as a message of joy or sorrow can better be borne by a friend than by a stranger, so the story of "Sag Harbor" can best be told by the people to whom it is most familiar.

Mr. Herne has never produced a play

quite equal to this latest effort, nor has he d himself with a more delightful character than that of Capt. Dan Marble, the jolly old "sea dog," who is always trying to make people happy, but who acca-sionally reads his compass awry. The fictitious narrative he reels off in the last act in order to straighten out the heart comolication involving the Turner boys and Martha is a happy conception and is delivered with rare power and feeling by the veteran author-actor. A half-dozen or more characters stand out with the same cameo sharpness that marks that of Captain Dan. part of Ben Turner, interpreted with faultless discretion by Forrest Robinson, is one of these. Another is the brother Frank. admirably portrayed by J. Wooster Dean. Frank Monroe, as William Turner, agent for the slow-going steamer Antelope, portrays an old resident of the village, whose presence makes the picture complete and causes many a hearty laugh. characterization that is absolutely unique and splendily portrayed by W. T. Hodge, is that of Freeman Whitmarsh, house, sign and ornamental painter, glazier, leader of the church choir and purveyor of gossip to the village. As an illustration of the pains that have been taken to secure a strong company, it may be stated that Mrs. Sol Smith, the delightful old character actress has been engaged to play the minor role of Mrs. John Russeel. Mrs. Smith's talent is of that high order which simply cannot be held in repression and it burst its bonds several times last night, winning for her as hearty applause as marked the work of the principals. Chrystal Herne, a daughter of the veteran actor, ir vests the lesser part of Jane Cau dwell with a grace and power that show her to be an heir apparent to her father's histrienic ability. She shares her inheritance equally, however, with her sister Julia, whose delineation of the fascinating character of Martha Reese, the orphan who was the innocent cause of the tragic complication, stamps her as an actress of exptional talent. Mollie Revel has the character bit of Frances Towd, Freeman Whitmarsh's associate in the painting business, and although she makes but one appearance, contrives to leave a distinct impression. One of the most attrictive members of the company and one of the ost talented is Marion Abbott, whose lineation of the spinster Elizabeth Ann Turner is only kept from perfection by her reat beauty of face and form. Her readof the lines in which she, as Mrs. Mar- | to-day.

coming to their home of one whom he had hoped and prayed for ardently is one of the most delicious bits in the production ard handled with marvelous delicacy and naturalness. The other members of the cast, whose roles are comparatively trifling, W. F. Whitman, John D. Garrick, T. H. Burke, Robert Gillig, Florence Horsfall and Edith Skerrett, each and all contrive to show that they were wisely chosen. "Sag Harbor" fairly scintillates with gems of homely, native wit and it is fully supplied with all the other elements essential to enduring popularity. Nor must the baby be forgotten. It is one of the tiniest and most loveable mites of humanity ever brought into the glare of the footlights. Pespite the uncomplimentary size of his audience Mr. Herne was generous to those who were present and made a graceful curtain address at the close of the third act. As has been intimated, "Sag Harbor' is filled with delightful situations, too numerous to recount in detail, but one cannot resist mentioning the delightful scene guessed from the fact that Capt. Dan 'accidentally" allowed a cork to pop out into the audience, thereby provoking an uprear of merriment. "Sag Harbor" will be repeated to-night, to-morrow afternoon and for the last time to-morrow night. There can be little doubt

"A Ride for Life" is the fetching title of a bright new melodrama that had its first presentation in this city yesterday afternoon at the Park Theater. The play is full of interesting incidents, tinged alternately with pathos and humor. The thrilling feature, so necessary to successful plays of this type, has been given careful attention by the author, Walter Fessler. The sensational escape on a swift-running locomotive in the third act is a clever and effective piece of stage realism and arouses much enthusiasm in the audience. Mr. Fessler is the inventor of this device. An excellent bit of character acting is done

Mr. Sellery also supplies a pleasing specialty in the form of a witty take-off on Edmund Hayes's "Wise Guy," and sings Hayes's famous song even better than the original. Ross Snow as Happy Dan, a tramp, and Carrie Ezier, as "an up-to-date keep the audience in a continual uproar of merriment with their lulicrous make-ups, funny songs and bright remarks. Mr. Snow is readily recalled by his excellent work in "1492" and "Jack and the actress. Little Erina, who portrays Rosetta Woodruff, Annie's sister, is scarcely more than six years of age, and is the best child actress seen here in a long time. The rest of the company, with the exception of Robert Harvey as Jack Woodruff, is appropriately cast. The play is provided with handsome scenery. It will remain the week out, with matinee and night performances daily.

Butterfly Burlesquers.

A wholesome change from the filth of other performances is to be noticed in the performances of the Butterfly Burlesquers which opened yesterday afternoon at the Empire Theater, to remain during the rest of the week. There is not a suggestive remark during the course of the show and no pauses or incoherent lines to show that anything has been eliminated. The chorus, while not large, makes up in strength of voices, but the singing of the soloists with the exception of Miss Amy Nelson, is very weak and can hardly be heard beyond the

"Life in the Metropolis," the title of the opening burletta, seems not to fit the piece as there is little in the acting that suggests anything in a big city. The comedy is furnished by Messrs. Perry, Barth, Leslie and Curdy, and is very silly. Miss Nellie Stapleton with the assistance of the chorus gives the Southern melody,

Miss Amy Nelson opens the olio with several songs which pleased. J. W. Leslie and . M. Curdy have a sidewalk turn that took up a great amount of time. Fred Barth and Della Fleming have a grotesque sketch in which Barth showed his ability in contortion work. Gilson and Perry are on the programme as two Irish comedians. The Metweff duo, two Russians, give a series of native dances. For the last burlesque a revival of an old-time act is used, "Scenes in a Divorce Court," that is practically devoid of merit.

At to-day's matinee Gus Ruhlin will appear and give a boxing exhibition with his sparring partner, "Denver Ed" Martin. On the 15th of next month Ruhlin is matched against Champion Jim Jeffries, the contest to come off at Cincinnati.

Notes of the Stage.

Manager Jules Murry will star Archie Boyd next season in a new pastoral play by Charles Barnard.

Sandol Milliken will, it is said, soon succeed Josephine Hall in the leading feminine role in Jeff De Angelis's musical comedy, "A Royal Rogue."

XXX Charles Leonard Fletcher is on the programme at the Grand next week, and it is aid that his act is one of the most unique and entertaining given here in a long time.

Dr. A. Conan Doyle is said to have requested William Gillette, the author-actor, to collaborate with him in editing the "Sherlock Holmes" memoirs which are soon to be published.

Hoyt's "A Brass Monkey," which booked at the Park the first three days of next week, is described as an exceedingly tright and clever satire on a popular superstition. The piece is provided with an excellent cast headed by Mazie Trumbull, a good looking young woman who is a clever singer and dancer.

To-day the Zoo will be in the hands of the Central Labor Union. The occasion is a labor benefit. Every arrangement has been made to make it a success. This occurred at the Baltimore Zoo yesterday. A telegram from Mr. Bostock described the occurrence. Just as soon as she recovers from her wounds she will appear at the Zoo in this city.

xxx In the cast of thirty people who have speaking parts in "Lost River," at English's next Monday and Tuesday nights, will be found several promising young players who belong to theatrical families and who are gaining their stage training in small parts. Among them are Miss Josie Lovering, niece of Daisy Lovering, of the Tannhauser stock company; Miss Edna Bert, daughter of Mabel Bert; Martha Albaugh, daughter of the famous old actormanager, John W. Albaugh, and Charles Farrington, brother of Miss Adele Farrington, of the "Cadet Girl" company,
